

I don't like to read the BOM on my own; so I wait until we read as a family.

I want to be closer to my Heavenly Father, so I pick up the BOM every night and learn of Him.

I'm not sure whether we have BYC this morning but I'm sure someone will call me if I need to be there.

I check my calendar each night to be sure I don't miss any important appointments.

I just bought the cutest outfit for my date and now I'm a little short on my rent. I'll just call my mom and see if she can send me some money.

I always set aside 10% percent of my paycheck in savings so I can take care of my own financial obligations, like rent.

This car my parents gave me is so ugly. I wish they would get me a nicer car. It keeps breaking down and then Dad has to fix it and I'm without a car—AGAIN!

My parents and I decided that I could drive their car if I would pay for my own insurance and take care of the routine maintenance.

I hope my parents have started saving for my college...my grades are terrible so I'm sure I won't get a scholarship.

I have started studying an extra hour each night so I can raise my GPA and qualify for a scholarship to college in a couple of years..

I have to get my tonsils out next week so I hope the Relief Society President remembers to send the sign-up sheet around on Sunday so we can have some meals delivered hot and fresh.

I doubled all my recipes this week so I could freeze the extra meals in preparation for my surgery next week.

I want to get a job but I'm waiting for my dad to pick up some applications for me. Then I need Mom to write a resume because EVERYBODY wants a resume these days!

I need a job to earn money for college so I have been checking the internet and visiting places of business every day this week. I'll be sure to check back next week to make sure they received my application.

My mom gives the BEST advice. I never make a decision without checking with her.

I have started praying daily to Heavenly Father about my everyday dilemmas. I feel so close to Him and I know He will lead me to make the choices that are right for my life.
